Dear Sir;

Something was recently brought to my attention which has greatly confused me, and I wonder if you could clear it up for me.

On December 1, 1970 the Times printed a review of two books on the John Kennedy assassination, " American Grotesque," and "Heritage of Stone." I was shown copies of the review both from the City Edition and the Late City Edition, and I was surprised to see that the review had been edited and shortened rather considerably. Needless to say, I am confused.

I am enclosing copies of the review from both editions to save you the time of digging through files. I am curious as to why this was done.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Jerry Policoff
